Consulting and Recruiting Services

Hello Dr. Piper,

For years we've been reporting about the ongoing shortage of veterinary doctors across the nation. You may not realize, though, that there is also a growing shortage of veterinary faculty.

According to an article published by the  National Institute for Health, attrition of veterinary clinical faculty has been an issue for several years and is causing significant problems in veterinary schools.

In a survey conducted of more than 1,200 faculty members, many respondents reported reasons other than compensation for leaving, including: departmental culture, work-life balance, lack of recognition, and lack of support of clinical medicine by the administration.

 Also, 44 percent of the appointed faculty left for a variety of reasons, including failure to achieve tenure, elimination of their position, or retirement. The respondents reported these were both voluntary and involuntary departures.

How does this translate into recruiting and retaining clinical practitioners? Whether in academia or animal clinics, providing your staff with a positive workplace culture that offers a supportive leadership team goes a long way to improving morale and the desire to be productive. In short, keeping your staff happy is best for your bottom line.

Do you need help with finding associates to join your practice? Give me a call and I'll explain how my team has earned an 88 percent success rate in presenting quality candidates to our clients in the first 90 days of the recruitment process. I look forward to our conversation.

Sincerely,

Hello Dr. Piper,

For the past few years, I have been sending you emails about the crisis due to the national shortage of veterinarians. Recent reports have indicated by 2030 there will be a need for 40,000 more veterinary doctors and 130,000 more technicians. Despite these startling statistics, there are some claims that a veterinarian shortage does not exist.

Here's a current look at the profession by the numbers, according to recent reports:

- According to our sources, as of Dec. 31, 2023, there were 127,131 veterinarians in the United States.
- The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports employment of veterinarians is projected to grow 20 percent from 2022 to 2032, with about 5,000 openings projected each year during that time period.
- In 2023, nearly 87 million American families (66%) had at least one pet, according to an article published by the World Animal Foundation. That number is expected to increase each year.
- More than 12,500 companion animal veterinarians are expected to retire by 2030.
- There is a need for more than 400 veterinary academic professionals, and it would take more than 30 years to meet the 10-

Lincoln Memorial University sues American Veterinary Medical Association

Published: June 18, 2025 | Updated: June 18, 2025

By Caitlin McCafferty, Editor

News Article

The university claims in its lawsuit that the AVMA is in violation of the US antitrust laws.

Lincoln Memorial University (LMU) announced earlier today that it has filed a lawsuit against the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA) for allegedly hindering competition in educating future veterinarians. This, in turn, hurts clients seeking care for their patients.

"This is a case about competitors conspiring to restrain trade, eliminate competition, reduce output, and raise prices in 2 inextricably intertwined markets; thereby, inflicting injury to consumers of both markets: [a] the US domestic market for veterinary education; and [b] the US domestic market for providing professional veterinary care and services. To carry out their illegal scheme, the conspirators have acted in concert in seeking to exclude Plaintiff Lincoln Memorial University ['LMU']—the largest provider of veterinary education in the country—from the veterinary education market, in violation of the US antitrust laws," the lawsuit states.²

According to the LMU release, they are suing the AVMA to challenge its anticompetitive accreditation practices that illegally restrict the number of accredited schools of veterinary medicine, the output of students, and the number of veterinarians in the United States.¹ The suit also claims that the AVMA is using its monopoly power to restrict new and existing veterinary schools from getting accreditation through its

MIND AND I/stock.adobe.com

Council on Education (COE) by requiring schools to meet requirements necessary to graduate veterinarians who are ready on the first day of their careers.

The AVMA has started demanding that veterinary schools offer their students research resources, facilities, and faculty that some schools may not be able to afford or are seen as unnecessary to their work for becoming a practice veterinarian.

The release also states that AVMA knows that these research requirements cannot be met by schools like LMU, which rely almost entirely on tuition for funding.

"These insurmountable barriers to entry for new veterinary schools limit the number of available veterinary schools, which limits the number of graduates, which limits the veterinary options for pet owners in America," said Jason McConnell, DBA, LMU president. "This is the essence of an antitrust violation. One economically interested group controlling the market to the detriment of consumers."

LMU was placed on probationary accreditation by the AVMA, and its second veterinary medicine campus in Orange Park, Florida, is facing impending accreditation denial despite being the largest veterinary school in the United States. LMU is also requesting that the court implement a long-term solution to the problem that the AVMA's anticompetitive behavior has created, which, to LMU, would be the complete and total separation of the COE from the AVMA. Through this, LMU believes it will restore free and unrestricted competition in the market.

LMU is not seeking any monetary damages from this lawsuit, only an injunction to stop the AVMA from continuing to execute its current accreditation standards in an unreasonable and anticompetitive manner.

"For more than a decade, LMU's Richard A. Gillespie College of Veterinary Medicine has successfully trained today's students to become some of the best veterinarians in America, and we will not allow an unjust gatekeeper to block competition and hinder their success," McConnell said.

"Our yearly veterinary student class is 225 students—that's the largest in America—and our students graduate with some of the best test scores in the country and are highly sought after as veterinary professionals all over the United States, precisely because of the excellent education, hands-on training, and skills they receive at Lincoln Memorial University. We are standing up for our students, for the future of veterinary medicine, and for the core pillars of our country's free market economy," he concluded.

“What an amazing time for this University and our state,” said Founding Dean Steven Marks. “Our goal is to create day-one-prepared veterinarians to serve communities around South Carolina. Animal and human health are directly connected, and we are so proud to be a part of creating the next generation of veterinarians.”

The College will help address the shortage of veterinarians in the state. A third of South Carolina counties have fewer than five veterinarians, and 48 percent of the state’s counties have fewer than 10 veterinarians. While qualified candidates are applying to veterinary colleges, 500-1,000 are not admitted due to a capacity shortage at existing colleges.

* The Harvey S. Peeler Jr. College of Veterinary Medicine continues the process of earning accreditation. It’s expected to welcome its first class of 80 students in Fall 2026. The Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree and curriculum have all been approved by the Board of Trustees, and the hiring of faculty and staff will continue in earnest for the next two years.

More information about the College and updates on its progress can be found on social media at @ClemsonVetMed or online at clemson.edu/cvm.

Today marks a historic milestone for our state as we break ground on the new College of Veterinary Medicine — a dream that's been a long time in the making. This is not just about education — it is about taking care of our animals, supporting our farmers, growing our economy and filling the need for veterinarians in South Carolina.

SEN. HARVEY S. PEELER JR.

Friday's groundbreaking was held on the site of the new complex. Speakers included Clemson University President Jim Clements, Founding Dean Steven Marks, current pre-veterinary student Ashlee Romp and Sen. Peeler.

"The Harvey S. Peeler Jr. College of Veterinary Medicine will be an incredible asset not only for Clemson University but for the entire state of South Carolina, our region and beyond," said University President Jim Clements. "Today's historic groundbreaking is a testament to the dedication and commitment of the South Carolina General Assembly, the Clemson University Board of Trustees, faculty, staff, students and champions like Senator Harvey Peeler. Together, we are further elevating our land-grant mission and continuing to meet the needs of our communities through education, research and service."

The complex is located across the street from Clemson University's Equine Center on West Queen Street in Pendleton. Nestled adjacent to the Clemson Experimental Forest, the College will prepare highly skilled and caring veterinarians to address a critical shortage in the state. The complex comprises six buildings designed to provide students with spaces for collaboration, hands-on learning and personal growth.

* The Hub will be a vibrant center where students can attend classes, study and engage with each other. The Clinical Teaching Building will house several labs and serve as the home for the Peeler College of Veterinary Medicine Community Clinic, where the public can access veterinary care. The Research Building will house faculty and graduate student offices, as well as research labs dedicated to advancing veterinary science. The Ambulatory Service Building will have a significant impact on the Upstate region, providing fourth-year students with vital clinical rotation experience on area farms as mobile veterinarians. The Equine Teaching Building will offer students a dedicated space to practice and learn about equine health in a safe and controlled environment. The Farm Animal Teaching Building will include specialized spaces essential for training students in farm animal care.

* The Harvey S. Peeler Jr. College of Veterinary Medicine continues working through the accreditation process. Pending approval from the American Veterinary Medical Association Council on Education, we'll welcome our first cohort of students in the Fall of 2026. Follow us on social media for regular updates. COLUMBIA, S.C. — According to Columbia animal health care officials, millions of pets could go without medical care as the nation faces a shortage of veterinarians.

"Last year, we saw 1,300 pets on our mobile vaccine clinic," said Denise Wilkinson, Pawmetto Lifeline's CEO. "Last weekend, we saw 635 pets. The only reason why we didn't see as many pets we saw last year is because we don't have the vets anymore."

Mr. John P. Piper

Dear Mr. Piper:

Chief Justice Rush asked me to respond on her behalf to your letter of September 25, 2018, requesting an investigation of an attack against you. Thank you for expressing your concerns.

Please understand, though, that the Indiana Supreme Court's jurisdiction is limited to the consideration of cases and controversies properly brought before it from lower courts in accordance with state law and the Indiana Rules of Court. The materials you have sent do not come within any laws or rules of court that define the Supreme Court's jurisdiction.

Particularly, the Court has neither the power nor the ability to carry out an investigation as you request. Courts and judges must remain neutral to decide cases. Investigating a case would tend to place the Court in the role of a partisan advocate, instead of the impartial arbiter that Due Process requires. So I'm glad to see that you've also sent your letter to attorneys general, a prosecutor, and the State Police—all of whom, unlike the Court, do have investigatory authority.

I regret we cannot be of assistance.

Respectfully,
